Hello,

My name is Kim, I love to create beautiful and meaningful design.

After years of learning as much as I could in Singapore and the UK, from fine arts to illustration design, graphic communication and food styling, I wanted to put my mixed-media education to good use. In 2015, I created an independent publication called T-pot Journal. In the last three years, we have published 10 volumes and garnered large support on social media with more than 47,000 followers.

In September 2017, I founded Away Studio - where I collaborate with chefs, designers & photographers to host cooking and food photography workshops. Away aims to connect people and learn about different cultures through culinary arts.

I've worked as a graphic designer on marketing campaigns for clients such as GlaxoSmithKline, Ribena, Intel, Bosch, Dell, Joyoung, on books and publications for PageOne Publishing, Well&Able, and The Coffee House, etc. I've also created posts in my own artistic approach for social media campaigns to promote brand products and services.

Through my work experience in Singapore, Vietnam and Thailand, I have had the opportunity to collaborate with talented photographers, writers, and artists from many different countries. I believe in teamwork and direct individual contributions toward a shared objective. I'm looking to extend my work to clients and host more creative classes in the future.

AWAY STUDIO

As the name implies, Away Studio doesn't have a fixed location. We host creative workshops wherever we go by collaborating with the talented local artist we admire most. Our activities aim to connect people through the culinary arts, photography, flower arrangement, drawings, DIY projects and so much more.

After months of traveling, we are now based in Ho Chi Minh City, Vietnam. In the heart of this dynamic fast-paced metropolis, our workshops are designed to help people find quiet moments of peace.
